

The Daily Gazetteer.

NUM. 3205

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1744.

Extract of a Private Letter.

Hague, June 13, 1744.

T is agreed by all our Politicians here, that Card. Tencin is by much a greater, or at least, a deeper Statesman, than Cardinal Fleury. The latter alarm'd them with his Projects; the former executes his without the least Notice. We are surpris'd to find, that this Attack on the Austrian Low Countries has been meditated these two Years; and that, while we imagined France was arriving a new Interruption into Germany, she was, in reality, laying Schemes to destroy us, and managing every Thing for the running away with our Barrier. Short, we daily discover so many Effects of his Emancipation's Subtlety, that, in all human Probability, we shall never be brought to trust him; especially as we are satisfied, his Scheme is to render our Republic dependent on his Master. The Abbe de la Ville knows this; and therefore, instead of cajoling our Ministers, who refuse at Stockholm, has wound him into a perfect Acquaintance with the Domestic Affairs of Sweden, and owes his Interest there to his being the Part of a Swedish Patriot. Immediately after the Peace with Russia, he pretended he was to become; effected to speak little of Business, and took infinite Share of Concern in the Interests of the Swedish People; protesting, he look'd on them as the best and best Nation in the World, and the worst of being cherished and supported. By degrees, he insinuated, that they have been unfortunately spoiled of their five Provinces in Germany; and that appears to be the properest Conjunction that ever opened, for recovering them. He often says to the King, that he hopes this will be the Glory of his reign; to the Ministry, he frequently professes he expects it from their Wisdom; and to the Nobility, he repeats, that Swedish Bravery is invincible.

The Marquis de la Chetardie acts in the very same manner in Russia, where he would be thought to negotiate the Negotiation about which he came from France, while the Court has not conceived advantageously of him, and to be now absolutely taken up with the Study of the Interests of that Empire, in which he professes to live and die a Subject. It is certain, that the Russian Nobility are extremely jealous of him; but he knows it so well, is so constantly upon his Guard, renders those who suspect him most, so many Services, that he lives in great Credit, and has a fair Prospect of gaining general Esteem. The Point he principally pursues, is the aggrandizing the House of Holstein; because he is sensible, this will recommend him to the Empress; but he always suggests, that this can only be brought about by mild and gentle Methods, which he is as confident, must recommend him to the Nobility.

The Marquis de Valori seems much more intent on recommending himself to the Favour of the King of Spain, than in executing the Commissions he receives from his own Court; for this Reason, he is very ready to give up, as absurd, and unreasonable, whatever Propositions have the Misfortune to appear in that Light before the Prince he attends. He enters perfectly into all Sentiments of Business, or Diversion; and if, at any time, his Majesty rallies the Follies of the French Court, he is the first to applaud his Penetration, and declares himself ready to burst for the Weakness of his Countrymen. In private Conversation, the King's Affairs are his continual Theme; and this in a Manner remote from that gross Sort of Flattery, which, by saying, renders itself odious, that, in all Probability, gains more upon his Majesty by Report, than by Addressing to him in Publick.

This Kind of Management, and by the extraordinary Dexterity of its Agents, the French Court has almost perfect Intelligence that ever any Court had; the present Minister knows so well how to adjust the present Humour of those they are to be propos'd to; that while they do the Business of France, they are France to be their Tool; and actually fancy, that in her present weak, and distressed Condition, they force her to adopt their Interests, in Prejudice to her own. I will, hereafter, give you some Instances of this; which shall convince you, that they have done more by their Intrigues, within the last nine Months, and that at no very great Expence, than the old Cardinal could effect by exerting the whole Force, and squandering a large Proportion of the Wealth of that Monarchy.

People, and that under the happy Government of our Protestant Prince, most raise in every good and Mind a just Indignation against them, and a tender horror to the Weak and Ignorant; who are thus expos'd horrid Delusions. Surely, never did any Thing, so the sacred Name of Religion, appear in the World, so grossly absurd and detestable as Popery, which is Merchandise of Men's Lives and Souls, and the Contradiction to Reason and Revelation, to Common Sense, and to all the dearest Interests of of Liberty, Conscience, and Eternal Salvation.
